FOREIGN NEWS.

Since our last, by the arrival on Monday afternoon of the packet ship CANADA Capt Wilson, from Liverpool, we have received London and Liverpool dates to the 31st of March, the Canada sailed on the day following.

The only important news we find is, that the Cholera has broken out in Paris, though it is thought its ravages will not be of so serious a character, as in England.

LATER. The London packet ship COLUMBUS, Capt Delano, arrived on Tuesday morning, bringing dates to the evening of the 31st; those by the Canada were to the morning of that day. They contain no additional information of importance.

The official Cholera Report is one day later—Under date of the 31st of March, it states that there were 87 new cases in London, and 41 deaths, since the preceding day. In the country 33 new cases and 16 deaths.

DUELLING IN FRANCE.—In consequence of some reflections by the Editor of the Tribune on Marshal Lobau, Commandant to the Parisian National Guard, four officers on the staff of the Marshal, last week, paid a visit to the office of the Tribune et Moniteur with—to use homely language—a very bulkying message. Taken unaware, the principal editor refused to meet a body of persons, but offered to give the Marshal himself personal satisfaction. The affair got wind, however, and in the course of the day many hundred young men left their cards at the office of the Tribune, praying to be allowed as assistant editors (reducteurs) to take off the ears, and accordingly, the Tribune of Thursday, intimated to the editor, pretty pickly in its columns, that 67 "editors of the Tribune were ready to go out with the 67 officers of which the etat major (staff) is composed. Saturday produced the first of the duels resulting from this challenge en masse. The principals in this affair were Gen. Jacquemimot of the etat major) and M. Rabinouet, the editor (in chief) of the Tribune. The former was attended by Gen. Gourgaud and Col. Taunton; the latter by Col. Etarquville (aide-de-camp) and M. Cattel, editor of the National. After an exchange of shots, the affair was terminated, and that particular affair was at least made up. It is by no means certain, however, that the remaining 66 officers of etat major will not call out the remaining 66 editors of the Tribune.

A DENTIST.—In a great debate in the British House of Commons, Mr Dawes alluded to some of his opponents, and among others to "the noble member from Sussex, who was asleep." Lord G. Lenox arose and declared that he "was not asleep,—he had kept awake although he had been in the House for many hours, and had been compelled to listen to Dawes' speech."

"GOOD SOCIETY"—The following strange occurrence has taken place at Champignonc (Eure) France:

An inhabitant of the village having dug a hole to entrap a wolf put upon it a live goose as a bait for the voracious animal. Another inhabitant, on perceiving the fluttering goose at a distance, approached it, and fell into the ditch which was eight feet deep, the sides being cut out so as to form an inverted cone. He vainly attempted to get out, and was patiently waiting for the return of day. But he had not waited long when something very heavy fell upon his shoulders. This was a wolf attracted by the faint. The fright of the man must be easily imagined; that of the wolf was equally great, for he immediately got into a corner, whence he did not stir all night. When day appeared, the man who had made the trap came up for his prey, and was not a little surprised at finding his two companions. The man was taken out more dead than alive. No forbearance was shown to the wolf, which was killed, for his forbearance during the night.—Gulignani.

FASHIONS

Prince Muckler Paskan is high authority upon all that pertains to fashion, and our lady readers will be surprised at his description of Almack's.

"The first Almack's ball took place this evening; and from all I had heard of this celebrated assembly, I was really curious to see it; but never were my expectations so disappointed. It was not much better than at Brighton. A large bare room, with a bad floor, and ropes around it, like the space in an Arab camp pitched for the horses; two or three small naked rooms at the side, in which were served the most wretched refreshments, and a company into which, spite of the immense difficulty of getting tickets, a great many Nobodies had intruded; in which the dress was generally as tasteless as the company was bad; this was all. In a word, a sort of confederation—the noise and the lighting the only good things. And yet Almack's is the culminating point of the English world of fashion.

"This overrated simplicity had, however, originally a motive. People of real fashion wished to oppose something extremely cheap to the monstrous taste of the rich parvenus, while the institution of Lady patronesses, without whose approba ion no one could be admitted, would render it inaccessible to them. Money and bad company (in the aristocratical sense of the word) have, however, forced their way; and the only characteristic which has been retained is the assembly place, which is not unlike the Theatre of a shooting ball in our large towns, and forms a most ludicrous contrast with the general splendor and luxury of England.

DISTINCTION ON CHOCKSMAN.— This person is a man of genius, who has raised himself from the estate of a poor fish-monger to that of the scourge, and at the same time the favorite of the rich and fashionable world. He is a gambler who has won millions (German money), and with them has built a gambling palace on the plan of the salons at Paris, but with a truly Asiatic splendor almost surpassing Reality. Every thing is in the new revived taste of Louis XIV., decorated with a a less excrescences, excess of gilding, confused mixture of stucco painting, &c—a turn of fashion very consistent in a country where nothing grows more and more like that of the time of Louis XIV ——— The company forms a club; admission is very difficult to obtain, and all the games of hazard are played in England; most of the Ministers are members, and one—the Pleasant one of the managers of this gaming club.

THE TOUPEE OF A LONDON DANDY.—As a specimen of the inventions of a London dandy, I shall with the following statement by my fashionable world taxman, who has employed by some of the most distinguished regans, and is the only person who knows the secrets of the gentlemen's wigs or toupees, brought in charts with plates of the right size. All elegant then wigs are worn with a suits twenty for pocket handkerchiefs, (unless he wears black neck ties down wardrobe, and wears a white one) Let your hosiery be yellow silk stockings. But as a dandy cannot get on without dressing three or four times a day, the affair is not simple, for he must appear—1st. In breakfast toilette—a chintz dressing gown and Turkish slippers. 2d Morning riding dress—frock coat, boots and spurs. 3d Dinner dress—dress coat and shoes. 4th Ball dress, with pumps, a word signifying shoes as thin as paper. —Tour of a German Prince.

Some boys a few days ago caught two young foxes on the farm of George Anderson, Esq. They each had three or Mr Ad ewes house, put them with a cat that had two small kittens—the mother fondly took them into possession, and now she feeds and caresses them as tenderly as if they were her own offspring—the young foxes are perfectly contented with their new mother.—Cincinnati Gazette.

SLANDER

COMMON PLEAS——HONOR JUDGE HOFFMAN.

George Jones vs. Alexander Bennett.

This was an action for slander. The plaintiff alleged that he was a faithful executor and intimate friend of Mary Ann Duff, and Mary C. W. Duff, her daughter, and betrothed in marriage to the daughter; that on the 16th day of January, 1832, in a conversation between the defendant and Mrs. Duff, the defendant declared that "he hoped that to his knowledge, he was a most unlucky man; that go where he would, he would get into debt and cheat people, and then leave the place; and that he had received letters from Mrs. Barnard containing money, which he denied receiving."

The plaintiff further alleged that While in the defendant, had said that "he had taken a gold chain from the neck of a lady, the wife of a gentleman in whose family he visited, and that when he returned to Boston, the husband would take him up for it."

By reason of these grievances, the plaintiff averred that he was greatly injured in his good name, and that the said Mary C. W. Duff declined consequence to refuse to receive his addresses. The plaintiff then read in evidence the deposition of Mrs. Mary Ann Duff, Mrs Duff being unwell, and not able to attend. It was as follows:

City and County of New-York, ss.

Mary Ann Duff of the said city, being duly sworn, doth depose and say, that she has been acquainted with the parties to the above entitled cause for some years—has heard defendant say that plaintiff was a most mean, cheating, knavish, that when he went to get in debt, and it the place and cheated people; that plaintiff had done so in Portland. These words of defendant were spoken in January last in the Richmond Hill Theatre, in the presence of several persons. Many of the performers heard these words—they were spoken in a loud tone. The defendant also said that Jones had received letters with money in them from Mrs. Bernard; and had concealed the receipt of said letters. The words of defendant were uttered several times that morning and on different occasions. That at Mrs. Bernard's the window of Charles Bernard. Defendant said that plaintiff had taken a gold chain from the neck of a lady, the wife of a gentleman in whose family he visited, and that when he returned to Boston, the husband would take him up for it.

Cross examined. Deponent has known defendant for about eight or ten years. Deponent always thought that defendant was friendly to plaintiff and intimate with him. Deponent understood that defendant was a friend to plaintiff, and that defendant was in the habit of paying his debts. She somtimes understand the meaning of the word cheat. Deponent says that defendant and he could take liberties with that charge were true against plaintiff. Defendant said I know it to be true. I can take my oath of it. Deponent thinks that whenever defendant told these stories he was believed to the detriment and distraction of plaintiff's interests. Deponent did not and does not believe the stories against Mr. Jones. That she had never heard any persons but defendant and Mrs. Polly speak against Mr. Jones. Defendant said that the town Mr. Jones had received letters from Mrs. Bernard, and that he concealed the receipt of them; and that he had told them of it—and defendant has never said so to her recollection. That the conversation aforesaid relative to the gold chain took place on the same day that the festival took place. Deponent has never heard defendant say that he had received letters from Mrs. Jones, which letter defendant said he meant to send to said Jones. In which letter there was an allusion to the circumstances of the gold chain. Deponent thinks that defendant meant to convey the idea that Mr Jones had committed a theft in taking said chain. That defendant stoty about the gold chain, was told some days (she cannot say how many) after the letter Aforesaid was written by deponent. But no one was present. Defendant said the story of the gold chain. That it was in a private room, where they had retired at defendant's request.

Direct examination resumed.

Deponent was the lady mentioned in consequence of the stories told to her by defendant. That she wrote such a letter, because of fright and fear of defendant, but because of fright and that every body believed those things, and would be prejudiced to the true character of her daughter, if she had not. Mr Jones continued to visit the family for some time after the receipt of the letter. Mr. Jones was in the habit of paying his board regularly and in the exclusive. Mr. Jones was in the habit of paying at the time letter was written.

MARY ANN DUFF.

A portion of the letter mentioned by Mrs. Duff to her daughter was read in evidence from which it appeared that she intended Mr Jones should discontinue his visits to her, until his character was cleared up.

The counsel for the plaintiff stated that the story of taking the watch complained of gave the name of Mrs Bernard as his authority, and that that was a sufficient vindication.

Richard Rush, Esq. Mr. Richard Hill The counsel for the defendant, Mr Wilson, in the case, Mr. Dwight, in order on behalf of defendant, moved that the jury be discharged, as there was no evidence to show that Mrs. Jones retained in this city from Hill's plea, which had not been proved. Mr. Dwight, in order to show that Mrs. Jones was not a resident of

TO OUR PATRONS.

Our readers will pardon us for this again obtruding ourselves upon their notice, but we take advantage of the acknowledged license of editors to puff themselves whenever any change in their plan affords a pretext for the egotism. Owing to the kind indulgence of our friends and patrons, we shall be enabled, at some additional expense, to enlarge and much improve the appearance of our sheet; and we avail ourselves of the occasion, to tender them our grateful thanks for the liberal support and indulgence they have ever been so ready to bestow upon our efforts to render this paper, the only similar publication in the Union worthy of themselves and of the patronage of the community. We are fully sensible, that up to this time, we have been unable to do justice to our readers—or to our object—but we are equally sensible that we have gathered wisdom from experience, and that by the reception of the best periodicals, and by the benefit always to be derived from an excellent exchange and valuable correspondents, we have it in our power to present our readers in future, a paper more useful and entertaining, and more entirely deserving their present liberal support.

It has afforded us the utmost pleasure to note abroad the increasing respect and good feeling shown us by a number of our cotemporaries. Entertaining a grateful sense of this kindness we beg of them severally to accept the expression of our sincere and hearty good wishes for their health and success.

To the trouble consequent upon our removal, and the necessity we were under, after putting up our press, of cutting a hole in the ceiling for the reception of the "frolic," a circumstance somewhat mortar-fying,—must be ascribed the want of method in our paper of to-day. We have presented our readers with no "criminal reports," which, to say the least, is not very civil of us; and independent of that, we have a large quantity of "raw material," on hand which, as friends of a moderate Tariff we are well aware ought to have been "manufactured." We beg our friends, however, to consider this as a mere episode in the history of our paper, and to believe, if they "forgive us this time, we'll never do so any more."

MAY-DAY IN NEW-YORK.

May-Day is no holiday dependent on the rubric, or the musty fables of monks and saints—it is a jubilee of Nature's own appointing, when the earth, dressing herself up in flowers and green garlands, calls aloud to her children to come out into the fields and participate in her merry-making; a glad some invitation which has been accepted with sparkling eyes and happy hearts since the world itself was young. To a Maying is not less healthy to the spirit than the frame; it is a reprieve from the thraldom of cities and artificial life, and rubs the canker of care from our hearts, by smiling them out among the green leaves. It enables the plodders and the souls of toil to shake hands with nature; and as they pluck the blossomy bough and dwell on the freshness and fragrance and the music of birds and the sounds of human happiness, it brings them into direct and grateful communion with Him, whom they have been too apt to view through the medium of gloomy or mysterious abstractions.

But, alas! for May-day in New-York! Our pen and our courage both shrink from describing it; we will only say that on Wednesday last we saw a certain gentleman in a thread-bare coat—"a servant of the muses, as you might have known by his livery—address an elderly, grave-looking individual, with a bill of fading in one hand, and a shapping list in the other, and moving his lips in some deep calculation to finish! We were in time to overhear the following conversation.

Poet—Are you for the country to day?

Merchant—I would attend you with pleasure sir, if i thought it would give me a good appetite for my dinner; but you must know that I am moving, and beside, I cannot possibly be absent from Wall-street.

Poet—I am quite aware of that—but how do you mean to manage after death? or do you imagine that the grin king will put up his scythe in its scabbard, and walk down stairs again, if you assure him that you are positively engaged to meet your broker at four o'clock? How you must envy the steeple of St. Paul's which keeps its happy station night and day, holidays and Sundays! Why the pauper who scrapes the mud off the highways is less a slave than you, who are incessantly scraping up gold. His body is not half so much exposed to annoyance as your mind; and when his day's labor is done, and his appetites satisfied he falls asleep without thinking of the morrow, whereas your head is perpetually at work; you can hardly sleep from the fear of losing what you have got, and so far from your cravings being appeased by plenty, you are everlasingly hungering and thirsting for more.

Mer—There you are mistaken—for as soon as I have completed a point I mean to retire to a box in the country.

Poet—My most solvent friend you may deceive yourself but you cannot deceive me. You will no more be satisfied with one point in your second childhood than you were in your first—there is but one box to which you will ever retire, and into that you will be screwed, nailed, narrow as it is, with all your mortgages, title deeds, bank stock and billion into the bargain, so you may as well make holiday while you can and follow me. Good day!

Mer—Canting fool! to affect to place riches in the scale of good things below learning.

The merchant was right. In our mind, money and knowledge stand to each other in the relation of cause and effect. How many persons could we cite, if we chose to be personal, who were formerly of no account whatever in the world, and whom a lucky hit has qualified for sitting in committees on the most abstruse matters of political interest! How many Poets could we name, who derive their title to that appellation exclusively from the means of paying their 'reader'. Horace indeed has touched this point with his usual smartness and perspicuity of remark—"Ego nec studeo bonus

Ut populus me sibi dicat
Nec, divitem me scit omnis," which, we conceive, to be thus literally translated—

"To money gives a force to genius not,
And you true genius less in a per cent."

But stop, there is our Poet again talking to a young lady, and by our faith, a very pretty and zealous one into the bargain. Let us listen.

Poet—"Love whose month is ever May" is a phrase of Shakspeare's no unmitated investigators of the human heart; but he meant the May of the country—not the season of fashion and dissipation in the city, where the young men are too much absorbed by imitation or avarice to feel any kindly expansion of the affections. Will you not join me in my rambles?

Lady—Certainly not. What would people say! besides, we are very busy to-day, and this evening we are to see Miss Hughes.

Poet—Come with me, and you shall see a Theatre millions of times more lofty and magnificent, and painted as well as illuminated by the hand of Heaven. Ay, and I will show you a Princess too, which you cannot behold in Mansion House; and the gems of her crown of Flora's own manufacture, shall be more curious and beautiful than all the jewellers of the world can produce; our musicians shall hover over us upon wings—and our food——

Lady—Good morning, Sir!—the man's mad.

We inclined to the same opinion, and returned to our office, after witnessing certain "moving accidents," as Otho Fo calls them, to notice the above sketches, and add to the press "with all its imperfections on its head."

"Out of these was some far amusing—so poured the horses, with a 'port and parcel,' in rather a fraction of a carriage attached to them, round the lighting wipped up, through Chatham Square, and having a very little the partiality for household furniture, rigging and a collection of a tin front of Mr Healey's store, where, for a few moments, they had every thing

"Like an Ape in a China Shop, all their own way."

After finally turning the tables upon themselves, they were "and the wreck of timber and the crushed tin" caught, secured, and provided from "mending."

A FOOL TRUE TO HIMSELF.—On Tuesday evening last, a horse, belonging to one of our subscribers, started from Brooklyn, run the toll, and jumped into the river. After several attempts to take him out, he was left to finish, if, when he immediately up hello, shaped his course for this city, and was extricated at one of the ships, by a watchman, under rather "unfavorable auspices." He will probably waive such proceedings for the future.

VIRTUOUS ANGER.—A man in Kentucky lately discharged another, whom he had hired to kill snakes, because the laborer was unable to accomplish the death of more than two and a half cords per day—three cords being considered a day's work. The employer should have remembered what "crooked sticks" his servant had to deal with before he placed him in such a "coil."

PRINTERS AND AUTHORS

It is the printer who commissions an author's conceptions—he gives to airy nothings a local habitation and a name! Without the compositor and printer's devil, what a poor dreaming, fruitless, fair thing is a wit! He is a soul without a body—a soldier, with plenty of courage and no sword—a lawyer, with brass and black letter, and no cause—a parson, brim full of divinity, without a pulpit—a statesman, well read in Machiavel and Locke without a voice at Washington. An author in MS is a half fledged shaven, unseemly to look upon; but, when turned out from the various hands, who conspire to dress and powder him for the public, what an Adonis he walks forth! what a typographical dandy! when the happy wight has gone through the beautifying hands of the compositor, devil, printer, sewer, and binder, then and then only, does he become fit to meet the embrace of fair hands and to lounge gracefully on the commode in the boudoirs of Broadway. Pope was a driveller when he said critics on wax the muses handsand—The lines should be

The printer lies the muses handsand proud
To dress her charms and in her bower be bow'd.

DANCING

For some thousand of years dancing was exclusively a religious ceremony. The dance of the Jews, established by the Levitical law to be exhibited at their solemn feasts, is perhaps the most ancient upon record. The dancing of David is also frequently quoted, and many commentators have thought that every Psalm was accompanied by a distinct dance. In several of the temples, a stage was specially erected for these exercises, but in process of time, they seem to have been practised by secular, as well as spiritual performers. The daughters of Shiloh were thus recreating themselves in the vineyards, when they were caught by the young men of the tribe of Benjamin, who pressently danced into the good graces, and carried them off to wives—a process which is frequently imitated even in these degenerate days. The heathens also could—sport a tune, in the very earliest ages. Pindar calls Apollo "the dancer." Homer in one of his hymns, tells us that this deity "cuts a pigeon's wing to the music of his own harp, and from Callimachus we learn, that the Nymphs were proficients in this elegant accomplishment, at the early age of nine years. For several centuries it was confined to military movements, when a battle was a grand ballet of action, opposing armies became partners in the dance of death, and cut throats and capers with equal sweetness. Since those troublous and operatic days, it has been limited to festive and joyous occasions. But now various the occasions in which it has been held, by inconsistent mortals—Socrates a wise Greeian, took lessons in this art from Aspasia. Cato, an uncorrupted Roman, urges the practice of dancing against Galba, as was grave and honorable offence. Of the moderns many signalize the sabbath by an increased activity of heels, while others manifest that as many pieces as a man makes in dancing so many leaps he makes towards hell. Let us hope that the increasing good sense of these well-meaning, but misguided sectaries will speedily get the better of such monkish austerities, that the time may come, when they may feel persuaded that our Maker can contemplate this innocent recreation of his creatures, with as much benignity as a parent regards the gambols of his children, and that the change may be justified by adapting the beautiful sentiment of Addison, "Cheerfulness is the best Hymn to the Deity."

May Day has come and passed since our last publication, and with it the bustle, the confusion and the turmoil so inseparably connected in the mind as in New-York with the idea of the return of this ex-year—serious anniversary—so overrated in poetry, as a day of flowers and festivity, but as an era of universal turmoil and vexation. It has passed, with its hosts of attendant fatigue duties to servants, golden harvests to porters and trans porters of all sorts, miseries huge and innumerable to gentlemen sellers, and sad inconveniences to every body; and our streets have resumed their wonted orderly though business-like aspect, and the lounger again ventures to inhale the air freely, even in our great thoroughfares, without imbibing more than a healthy proportion (say one fourth) of pure dust by the operation—But it behts neither our vocation nor our purpose to waste time in the narration of events and matters already within the cognizance of every casual observer nor even in moralizing upon them—Our present intent is rather to detail some of the catastrophies and "dire mishaps" which have grown out of the emigrating and renovating mania with which our good citizens are so universally afflicted at each return of the unlucky period alluded to; and to do this we have but to select from the pile of epistles, some plaintive others humorous, with which we have been favored in relation to this subject. The following is the first which comes to hand, and the allusion which it relates, is a "moving accident in more senses than one.

Hudson street, May 3. 1832

MESSRS EDITORS:

Hear me you shall, pity me you must, while I proceed to give a short account of the dreadful calamities which this vile habit of turning the whole city upside down, tother side out, and wrong side before, on the first of May has brought down on my devoted head.

You must know that, having resided but a few months in your city, I was totally ignorant of the existence of said custom—so, in the morning of the eventful and to me disastrous day, I rose, according to immemorial usage, at the dying away of the last faint echo of the breakfast bell, and soon found myself seated over my coffee, and my good landlady exercising her powers of volubility (no weak ones I apprehend) in the behalf, but so deep was the reverie in which my half awakened brain was then engaged, that I did not catch a single idea from the whole of her discourse. I smiled, and said, "Yes ma,am." "Certainly ma,am," at each pause, and having speedily despatched my breakfast, sallied immediately out, and proceeded to attend to the business which engrossed my mind. Business came, but no time for dinner, and it was late in the night before I was at liberty to wend my way, over wheel barrows, barrels, and all manner of obstructions, towards my boarding house. All here was still, but by the help of my night keys, I soon introduced myself to my chamber, dreaming of nothing but sweet repose, when, horrible to relate! my ears were instantaneously saluted by a most piercing female shriek, proceeding exactly from my own bed or at least from the place where it should have been, and scarcely had sufficient time elapsed for my hair to bristle on my head, before the shriek was answered by the loud vociferations of a ferocious mastiff in the kitchen beneath, and re-echoed by the current set half a dozen inmates of the house, and these again succeeded by the rattle of the watchman; and the next moment there was a round dozen of them (besides the dog) at my throat, all commanding me to tell them instantly what the devil all this meant.

"You do well to ask that," said I, as soon as I could speak, "after taking upon me in this fashion in my own chamber."

"O take him off," said the one who assumed to be the master of the house; perhaps he's not a thief after all; but, being a little too tipsey for starlight, he has made a mistake in trying to find his lodgings—and in spite of all my remonstrances, I was forthwith marched off to the watch house, to pass the remainder of the night. In the morning I narrowly escaped commitment on the charge of "burglary with intent to steal." (I verily believe it would have gone hard with me if the witnesses could have been got there at that unseasonable hour,) and I was finally discharged with a solemn admonition to guard for the future, against intoxication (think of that, sir, for a member of the cold water society!)

I spent the next day in unravelling the mystery, and found that my landlord had removed his goods and chattels to another part of the city on the established day, supposing me to be previously acquainted and satisfied with his intention of so doing, and another family had immediately taken his place; of which changes my mind by absence of mind and absence from dinner had kept me ignorant; and thus had I been led blindfold into a "comedy (or rather tragedy) of errors"

NEW COUNTERFEITS

Three dollar bills of the Bank of Orange County were put in circulation yesterday. The bills are well executed, except the face, which is very red—the paper is darker than the genuine notes. They are marked A, a date of 2d Oct 1831, and signed Jn Smith, President, W. Seward, Cash.

A new counterfeit three dollar note, on the Sackett Harbor Bank, has been put in circulation. They are letter B, payable to B. Masterson, dated 1st May 1827, signed D. M. Hern, cashier, Jos. Wesbert President. The whole appearance of the note is bad, particularly the engraving, which is very coarse.

TREE HILL RACES.—May 1st.

The Racing over this old course this year will be unusually attractive, says the Richmond Wing. All the stables are expected to come there and selecting their best from previous trials, may well serve to amuse and delight those that can dedate a few days to the noble and invigorating recreation of the Turf.

It is rare in the annals of Racing, a sweep stake has the first days run be presented to the public. Important in its consequences to the breeder it affords much interest to the amateur. There are six entries, play or pay, hence "no cold blooded delay," no giving back, but front to front, each has to fight it out, and "must stand the hazard of the die." Descendants of Gunnaway, enriched by a long line of noble ancestry—Tuson, the gallant steed that never failed his rider—Molley, the conqueror of Ariel, the pride of the turf—Eclipse, the Champion of the North—Arab, as fleet as his name purports—and Contention, home! the sire of a hundred Kings, must contend in gallant shew and formidable array for the honor and fame of their fathers.

The second day, it makes an interesting sweep stake will be run for the Proprietor's Purse, 2 mile heats; and when it is known Andrew Clifford, Annett, Gominus, Traffic, Pacanikey, Rapid, Trifle, Betsy Hare, Lady Washington, &c. will be there, who can doubt but sport must follow!

The third day comes off the Jockey Club Purse of $1000, 4 mile heats, and there will be the beautiful and victorious Bonnets O'Blue, but

"Hope though hence must fly to go!
No, by St Hubert Bobtail, no."

for there, too, will be Sally Hornet, Garrison's Splendid, 4 years old, Bayard, Collier, Maria Wise, Sparrowhawk, Molly Howell, Mohawk, &c., fearful odds, though backed by the judgement of Johnson and the fame of the grey mare.

On the fourth day, is a sweepstake purse worth $1500, and many colts of fine promise named. Also on the same day, a Proprietor's Purse 2 mile heats, free for any age, and from the unprecedented number of fine horses in training, a very good sport may be expected. The respect ability of this Club, not inferior to any other sporting in the world, offers the best warrant and guarantee, for the liberous manner in which the sports of the Turf are conducted. Here beauty lends her fascination—here the Lawyer, forgetting the rights of mum and tomm, without fee or reward snatches an hour from thought. The Doctor throws away the Pill Box and the old settle of Farmer, with hands uplifted and mouth expanded, grasps tight his pocket book, and wonders at all he sees. Could not our politicians in the city of Washington find a few days to the sports of Tree Hill? It would take many a wrinkle from the brow, and be a healing balm to a weary and troubled mind. If President Jackson could see the Bonnets o'Blue, Bayard and Sally Hornet, with Collier at their heels, streaking it down the quarter stretch, he would think no more of the rejection of Van Buren. Calhoun would forget State Rights, and Clay, in an ecstacy of delight, would send the American System to the Devil. May are there, that Richmond would be glad to see—no party—no feeling but that of honorable, high minded gentlemen, met together in good fellowship. All hands will bid you welcome, and when we cannot give you splendor, we will try and give you fun.

FAIRFIELD COURSE

This old and famous Course, says the Richmond Wing, has been revived after 17 years sus pension. The concourse of people on the occasion was very large. We understand Wilfred's Gohanna colt won, and was sold for $2000 on the spot.

SAVANNAH RACES

The most sport of the week Am 12d was exhibited on Sunday by some one unknown, who had twice in for the purse of $200 and the proceeds of the day, which exceed the hard scrabble and most interesting running at a mile one entre. There were four animals starting—Mr Wadley's mare Patsey, 2 years old—Mr Hunter's ch. f. 2 years old—Mr Wade's gr. m. 4 years old, and Mr Wade's ch. m. 4 years old. The mare Patsey was the favorite, and rather the odds against the field. The two middle aged nags, I believe, belonged to Mr Wade. The race was won by Patsey, by about a length, and vice versa of Redgauntlet. Sir William commanded first. Time 1m 58s.

The 2d heat was also well run, and was again won by Patsey, by about a length, and vice versa of Redgauntlet. Sir William commanded first. Time 1m 58s.

The 3d heat was in favor of the mare, who had received spurs and unspared lashes, which, however, were put on by her owner, urging Redgauntlet, who by only a length, won the race, which made the 3d heat, Redgauntlet, 1st; Patsey, 2d; Hunter's ch. f. 3d; Wade's ch. m. 4th. Time 1m 58s.

The last round was won out and the hot was so decisively in favor of Patsey, that Redgauntlet was not required. Time 1m 58s.

The fifth and decisive heat, was rather more interesting, was taken up and contested without any effort on either side, and it was only in the latter part that the struggle was made in Patsey's behalf, and Redgauntlet was left behind. Time 1m 58s.

The sixth and last heat was contested with the same spirit, and was won by Patsey, by about a length, and vice versa of Redgauntlet. Time 1m 58s.

The seventh and last heat was contested with the same spirit, and was won by Patsey, by about a length, and vice versa of Redgauntlet. Time 1m 58s.

The eighth and last heat was contested with the same spirit, and was won by Patsey, by about a length, and vice versa of Redgauntlet. Time 1m 58s.

The ninth and last heat was contested with the same spirit, and was won by Patsey, by about a length, and vice versa of Redgauntlet. Time 1m 58s.

The tenth and last heat was contested with the same spirit, and was won by Patsey, by about a length, and vice versa of Redgauntlet. Time 1m 58s.

COMMUNICATION.

THE PUGILIST TO HIS MISTRESS.

"——a black eye in a recent scuffle,
For sometimes we must box without the muffle"
DON JUAN.

All punished and penitent down on the knee
I bend to thee Kate, to avert an adieu:
Oh let not thine eyes, love, look black upon me,
Because mine are forc'd to look black upon you.

Am I worse in your eyes, for being worse in mine own?
Are the women to pun ish as well as the men?
I thought you'd have brought, when you found me alone,
Opodeldoc and smiles to restore me again.

You know I love sparring and posey, Kate,
And scarcely care whether I'm hit at or kiss'd,
You know that Spring equally makes nefpiate,
With the blow of a flower, or the blow of a fist.

You know as you walked one damp evening of late,
With your beau at your side, that a bow in the sky
Arch'd its colors ethereal, and surely, my Kate,
Tum must be the rainbow I had in my eye.

Forgive me, and muffers I'll carefully pull
Over my knuckleah reather, to make them well bred;
To modify nuss in the kidney with wool,
And temper with leather a punch of the head.

And Kate! if you'll fix from your forehead that frown,
And spur with a lighter and prettier tone;
I'll show of the swelling should ever go down,
And these eyes look again—upon you, love, alone!

BOXING.—An elderly maiden lady has written us an expostulatory letter on this subject, in which she expresses herself shocked at the indecency of the spectacle of two enormous men (these are her very words) exhibiting themselves stripped before thousands of spectators. We answered that letter privately, and humbly suggested that a boxing was a more indecent exhibition than a waltzing match. "Well, well, Mr. Editor, no more about indecency, but think of the cruelty, the brutality of boxing!" Brutal! no brute animal of our acquaintance is a pugilist. Dogs do not box cocks do not box—a bear is good at a close—but he is a round hitter, and too much of a ruffian for the ring. Man is, in fact, distinguished from the brute creation by nothing so much as being a boxing animal. He shares the faculty of speech with the bullfinch, the starling, the magpie and the parrot;—and in the art of cookery he is excelled by Delmonico,—extinguish in his bosom the love of pugilism, and you reduce him to a level with the beasts that perish. As to his cruelty, no doubt it would be to the last degree cruel for Fuller to tip some unsuspecting wight a stomacher; but who would talk of the cruelty of giving Fuller himself a facer. The fact is, that game pugilists enjoy intense pleasure in knocking and being knocked down; and there is not a sentiment of more active kindness in humanity than "pleasure in the way we like it." Dangerous it may be; but any one doctor that ever administered a prescription has killed more men than all the pugilists that ever fought, either with cestus or naked fists. So,

"Let Dares beat Entellus black and blue."

SUICIDE.—At a recent Circuit Court in Wayne county, a verdict of $500 was obtained against Henry E. Youngs for the seduction of Garrett's daughter; and a verdict for $400 was given in favor of Dr. Alex. M. Intyre, of Palmyra, against Samuel Rogers, for slander.

A SHARPISH TRICK.—On Friday afternoon, five men, belonging to Cape Cod fishing vessels lying in Newport, were arrested in the Week, brought to town, and arraigned before two Justices upon a charge of stealing wool by plucking it from the back of five sheep, belonging to the flock of G. S. Hazard. They pleaded guilty, and were mulcted by the Court in the sum of 25 dollars.

RAILS WORK.—Messrs. Phillips and Graham purchased a tract of Land from Gen. Lacock, on the Ohio river, on Monday of last week, laid out a town on Tuesday, and built fourteen houses in four succeeding days. At this place they intend establishing their ship yard—Beaver Argus.

A party of gentlemen, consisting of about twenty, gave a very splendid dinner at the Boston Exchange, on Thursday, to Mr. Sinclair of the theatre, as a testimony of their respect for his private worth and professional talents. The entertainment passed off in the most harmonious and agreeable manner.

Some profound arithmetician being at a loss for something to do, has calculated that etery inveterate snuff taker, who has continued this practice for forty years, has dedicated two entire years of his life to taking snuff—and two more in blowing his nose!

Mrs. Eliza Blond, was convicted, at the court of sessions, in Ableville District, S. C. of keeping a Faro Bank, and playing at that game, and sentenced to six month's, imprisonment and a fine of five hundred dollars.

FEMALE PATRIOT.—Countess Emily de Plater, the Polish heroine, died a few days ago in Paris. This lady is memorable for commanding a regiment of horse, which she raised and equipped at her own expense.

Judge Prioleau, of Charleston City Court, has decided that a mule is not a horse; and that the city ordinance restraining horses from running at large, does not authorize the arrest of mules.

We hear that Paganini acknowledges to having cleared £22,000 by his visit to England, and £6,000 by his stay in Paris.

A distinguished member of the Garrick rushed into the club the other night from a Drury Lane representation of "Robert le Diable," exclaiming "Bishopped, by G——!"

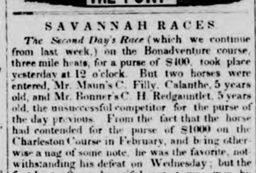
It was observed the other day at the Garrick Club that W. Goblet of Bond street ought to be named as one of the Meat-ropolitan members.

A fancy ball was given last week, by a celebrated Marchande des modes, near Hanover square, which is said to have exceeded all the entertainments of the season, in the elegance and whimsicality of its costumes, and the beauty of its quiz. All the foreign artists (hairdressers, musicians, shoemakers, dancers—all are artistes, with the French,) did honor to the fete, which was intended to commemorate some family event. Jarrin furnished a most elegant supper, and on the day of Boyle Farm, nothing has been so prettily arranged as the bal costume of la Reine des modes!

AN AMATEUR PIRATE.—The following anecdote refers to Mr Trelawney, the author of the "Younger Son," recently published.

Piratical outrages were formerly of every day occurrence in the Eastern seas, and that they were not better known is attributable to the exterminating system of the rovers, whose motto was that "dead men tell no tales." The answer made by T——(one of Lord Byron's boon companions) when asked by the noble bard how the pirates of the Eastern seas disposed of their prisoners, illustrates their motto better than any other description. It seems, had past some time in a praticial bark, and Byron, who was always glad to have a ruffian hero in his train, did not like him the less for this little escapade. "Well, but how did you dispose of your prisoners?" said his lordship to him one day. "We never took any, the other coolly replied, "we always sent our Malays on board the prize, and they used to return and say that there was no one on board!" The Malays are celebrated for their unsparing use of the kriss or dagger.

A tradesman, deservedly dear to his late Majesty, has just failed for the sum of £140,000.



SAVANNAH RACES

The Second Day's Race (which we continue from last week,) on the Bonadventure course, three mile heats, for a purse of $800, took place yesterday at 12 o'clock. But two horses were entered, Mr. Mann's C. Filly, Calanthe, 5 years old, and Mr. Bonner's C. H. Redgauntlet, 5 years old, the unsuccessful competitor for the purse of the day previous. From the fact that the horse had contended for the purse of $1000 on the Charleston Course in February, and being other wise a nag of some note, he was the favorite, notwithstanding his defeat on Wednesday; but the first heat, after a beautiful contest, was won by Calanthe, by nearly a length. Having displayed her fleetness, high hopes were entertained by her friends of her ultimate success, and such was the result, she winning also the second heat by about three lengths.

TIME.

1st heat, 5m 58s. | 2d heat, 6m 2s.

About the same number of persons were present as on the day before, and among the carriages we were gratified to perceive a considerable number containing a portion of the beauty and fashion of the city.

The following horses have been entered for this day's purse of $250, 2 mile heats.

Mr Hunn's C. S. Colt, Sir William, 2 years old—Riders dress, chocolate-colored jacket and black cap.

Mr. Grimes' C. S. G. Nat Cook, 5 years old. Riders dress, blue and pink.

The Third Race being for a purse of $250, took place yesterday as advertised. But two horses were entered, Mr. Hunn's Sir William, 2 years old, and Mr. Grimes. Ned Cook, 5 years old, both sorrels, the color of every animal that has yet run this season. Bets, two to one were freely made on the colt before the race, and the termination proved the correctness of this judgment. The running excited but little interest, as it was soon apparent that the horses were not at all matched. The first heat was won by Sir William by more than twenty yards, and in the second barely allowed his antagonist to save his distance.

TIME.

1st heat, 3m 58s. | 2d heat, 4m 5s.

This is the last day of the races, and the following horses are entered:

Mr. Bonner's ch. Redgauntlet, 5 years old.
Mr. Wallace's s. f. Paisey, 2 years old.
Mr. Hunn's ch. c. h. Sir William, 5 years old.
Mr. Winkler's s. g. Shpeldes, 5 years old.

MILLEDGEVILLE, (Geo.) April 19, 1832.

THE RACES.

Over the Course at this city, commenced on Wednesday last, and continued four days. The Course was in good order, and well attended by numerous spectators; the weather was fine, and every thing went off with great eclat.

First Day, six colts were started for a sweepstake of 150 dollars, 1 mile and repeat, and was soon decided by Mr Puryear's brown bay colt, Belisarius, 4 years old, by Muckilejohn from an Oscar mare, distancing the field the first round, time 1 minute 55 1-2 seconds.

Second Day, three mile heats—Mr. Bell's bay mare, Jane Medill, 4 years old, double Archer, and Mr. Vanlandingham's sorrel horse Muckilejohn, 4 years old, by Muckilejohn from a Potomac and Gallatin mare, contended for a jockey club purse of 250 dollars. At the tap of the drum they went off finely, Muckilejohn taking the lead and coming out about 100 yards a head under a tight pull; time 6 minutes 6 seconds. 2d heat Muckilejohn started badly, running against the Judges stand and embarrasing to limit, but finally cut and contested closely for the race, but Jane taking the lead from the start seemed to keep it with ease until the last round, when both were urged with whip and spur Jane coming out about a length a head, time 6 minutes 9 seconds. 3d Heat both appeared in fine spirits and went off finely, Jane taking the lead, Muckilejohn gaining at the coming out of each mile—at the last quarter stretch of the last round he came up with Jane, and when urged to pass, he bolted from the outer to the inner track—he was again urged forward, and again came up with Jane and bolted within ten feet of the Judges stand, determining the race in favor of Jane Medill—time 6 min. 9 1-2 sec.

Third Day, two mile heats—Mr Vanlandingham's sorrel horse, Littlejohn, 5 years old, by Muckilejohn, from a Potomac and Gallatin mare, and Mr. Puryear's colt Belisarius, were entered for a Jockey Club purse of $200. At the signal for saddling, Belisarius did not appear—said to have choked himself the night previous, when Wynne's came forward and entered his bay mare, Polly Powell, 4 years old, by Jackson, from a Dion mare. At the tap of the drum, they started finely, Littlejohn taking the lead, and coming about 70 yards a head under a pull, Polly Powell's rider broke his stirrup the last round; time 1 min 11 sec. 2d Heat a good start, Littlejohn taking the lead, Polly Powell trailing close; at the last half mile stretch she made an effort to pass, and locked him for a few paces, but finally fell back, and gave up the race—time 4 minutes.

Fourth Day, one mile, three best in five—Gate money, &c. $200. Mr. Hibbers saddle horse Romeo, 5 years old, Mr Vanlandingham's sorrel horse, Muckilejohn, Mr. Bell's horse Van Buren 5 years old, by Ferdinand from an Oscar mare, and Mr Puryear's bay mare Hulda Ware 6 years old, by Sir Andrew from an Oscar mare were started. 1st Heat was taken by Hulda Ware; time 1 min. 56 sec. 2d Heat Hulda Ware again came out a head, under whip and spur, trailed close by Romeo, time 1 min. 55 sec.—this heat Muckilejohn fell on making the last turn and though he came out without his rider, saving his distance, not having his weight he was declared distanced. 3d Heat Van Buren took the lead and came out a head, with apparent ease time 1 min. 58 sec. 4th Heat, Romeo was withdrawn, the remaining two went off finely, Hulda Ware taking the lead to the second turn, when Van Buren passed her and come out a head, time 2 min. 1 sec. 5th Heat Van Buren took the lead, trailed close to half way, the first quarter stretch, when he seemed to fail, Hulda Ware passed and came out a head, time 1 min. 57 sec.

The time was kept by three disinterested and respectable gentlemen.

NEW-ORLEANS RACES

The Race on yesterday, (April 14,) of two miles and repeat, for a purse of $300 was run by Polly Powell, Andrew Jackson, and Hoyoyo. The latter was distanced the first heat, and the second heat Andrew Jackson was withdrawn, leaving Polly Powell mistress of the field—time 3m. 48s.

COUGAR HUNTING,

IN NEW-YORK AND PENNSYLVANIA.

In the United States, the destruction of this animal is usually effected with the rifle. Our hunters, by reason of great perfection in shooting this instrument of death, and their familiarity with the Cougars, regard these animals in no other light than certain victims to their unerring aim; few indeed escape, when once the keen eye of the hunter ranges the barrel of his rifle, or the new fallen snow betrays the footsteps of these wily destroyers. Its fee simply exciated and when a painful wound is inflicted, its rage is terrible, and will evince the utmost determination to revenge itself. Many anecdotes may be told, illustrative of this disposition; one or two however, will suffice.

A party of hunters, residents of Delaware county, in the state of New York, made an excursion after a Cougar, which had frequently been seen prowling about the neighborhood. Before starting, the preliminary agreed on was, that if the Cougar should be started, and treed, it was not to be shot until each individual composing the party should be present—this agreement broken, a penalty of all the expenses of the day, was to be imposed on the offender. Shortly after starting, the dogs aroused the game, and after a chase of a few miles, along the mountains, among rocks and almost impenetrable lands, it took to a beach tree, and clambered to the top, about thirty feet from the ground, where it crouched and watched the dogs which were in numbers barking at the foot of the tree. Among the party was a stranger, who had never experienced a hunt of the kind, and regardless of the penalty to which he would subject himself resolved at all hazards to shoot the Cougar, an opportunity offered, and enjoy the satisfaction of having destroyed one of the most ferocious wild animals of our forests. Accordingly he hastened to the scene of action when he saw the animal resting on the tree, and immediately fired at its heart—but to his astonishment, instead of killing he only aroused its vengeance, for the moment he discharged his rifle, the Cougar began to growl and spit, and rip and tear every bough of the tree within its reach, and when on the point of leaping at the hunter, a shot from an unknown rifle, hurled the animal to the ground dead, within ten or twelve feet of the person who first fired, and who being so excessively frightened and overcome with terror, that he sunk fainting on the ground, and but for the timely intervention of his friend, would have been torn to pieces. Being on a rocky promiscue, and the place so overgrown with high laurels, he did not see two of the hunters who had arrived a few minutes before him, and their were they aware that any of the party were present but themselves, until they heard the report of the rifle within a few yards of them, and being experienced hunters, they knew by its sound, that the animal was slaying the last of the party of their friend, and the timely interference and unerring aim of Capt. W——, only saved his life.

The following anecdote, which is copied from Godman's Natural History, was furnished by the late William Scudder, who had the Cougar, and which is still in the N. York Museum.

"Two hunters, accompanied by two dogs, went out in quest of game near the Eastskill Mountains. At the foot of a large hill, they agreed to go round it in opposite directions, and when either should be forced his rifle, the other was to hasten toward him to aid in securing the game. Soon after parting, the report of a rifle was heard by one of them, who hastened towards the spot, where some time, he found nothing but the dog, dreadfully lacerated, and dead. He was now much alarmed for the fate of his companion, and while anxiously looking around, was horror-struck by the harsh growl of a Cougar, which he perceived on a large limb of a tree, crouching on the body of his friend and appearing meditating an attack on himself. Instantly he levelled his rifle at the beast, and was so fortunate as to wound it mortally, when it fell to the ground along with the body of his slaughtered companion. His dog then rushed upon the wounded Cougar, which with other blows, soon killed the poor creature dead by its side. The exciting hunter now left the spot, and quickly returned with several other persons, when they found the dog Cougar extended near the dead bodies of the hunter and the faithful dog.

The Cougar is exceedingly tenacious of its food, and rather than relinquish it, will suffer death. Instances of this kind sometimes occur, which the following anecdote from the same author will show.

About five miles from Philadelphia, Centre county, Pennsylvania, on the 20th day of December, 1825, shot at a buck, and wounded him in the shoulder. He followed the animal for some time, and at length perceived him at the distance of about forty yards, lying with his heels upwards, and a Cougar licking him by the throat. The hunter discharged his rifle at the Cougar and shot it through the heart, when the animal turnpussied the buck, advanced four or five yards, and fell lifeless. Having again charged his rifle, and believing the Panther to be dead, Mr. Mitchell, turning towards the wounded buck, was surprised to see another Cougar in the act of pulling down the head; and, as it now appeared, the buck had been held down by both Cougars at the moment the first was killed. The body of the buck was between the hunter and the second Cougar nothing but the head of which was visible. At this Mr Mitchell rewind his rifle, and the ball entered it at the angle of the eye. The beast remained still for a few minutes, and then for the first time, relinquished his hold of the buck and walked over it towards the hunter who fired his rifle a second time, and shot him through in the neighborhood of the heart. At this moment the buck recovered his legs, stumbled over the body of the Cougar, finally extricated himself, and ran off. A third discharge of the rifle pierced the Cougar with another ball, yet he still remained on his feet, and it was not until the rifle was again discharged, and a fourth ball drawn through the back part of the under jaw, that the animal fell, and expired. What is most singular is that the male should not have relinquished his hold of the buck even in the female was killed, but continued in the same position until the ball entered his own head, near the eye. The buck ran more a mile before he was finally overtaken, and killed.—American Rural Sports.

THE DOG FISHER

We give the following extract of a letter, inserted in the old Sporting Magazine of the present month, as a very singular evidence of the extraordinary sagacity of the dog. It appears from this letter, that a dog of no particular breed was given some time back to the superintendent of a salmon fishery at Craives, in the vicinity of Aberdeen.—Bell

"Mr. S., the worthy superintendent alluded to, says the writer, is a person not only extremely attentive to the discharge of his trust, but is also endowed with much curious observation and shrewdness, and his nightly vigils have not yet rewarded him to a sixpence, though he is quite for the loss of his favorite dog, for certain, from being a very sportsman, and taking an interest in the chase of the salmon, though he is now in the 62 year, which I should long since have told, you was christened by the name of Tiger. Withthat grateful instinct which characterises his race, this sagacious creature began to consider as it were, how to render himself useful to the kind hand that fed and caressed him, and for that purpose, in constantly attending his master to the water side, saw that fish was the object, and water the element he had to study. Accordingly, although smooth haired, and without a particle of the spaniel, Newfoundlander, or water dog in him, he set about swimming and learning to practise all manner of aquatic evolutions, sniffing about the nets, and at first fearfully approaching the salmon as they were drawn to shore, and eager to mouth them. For a while, led only by the sweep of the net, and sight of the corks up heaving it, but by degrees, eagerly watching the practised eyes of the fishermen who see long down the stream the approach of fish by a particular swirl on the surface of the river, immediately over the salmon (imperceptible to any vision but their own.) Tiger soon became as expert at this as themselves, and at his warning would they always hear themselves, and generally with success. Not only did the dog do this, but he went further—he saw the fish for himself and took them by himself, without the assistance of man, or material of any kind! At first, as was to be expected, his success was small, but his instinct seen made him expert, and he has been known to kill from twelve to fifteen salmon in a day. In the coldest mornings and the darkest nights, he was, it may be said, never off guard, nor ever so happy as when on it. In a middling river, when the water was not too high, he would place himself for hours together on a stone a little below the rapids, and watch the fish coming up, allow it to pass him, when following it up to the rush at the bottom of the dykes, where it was shallower, bounce at once on his prey, and fixing his teeth a little below the neck, keep fast hold, and struggling with the salmon, sometimes above water, and sometimes below it, go down the stream for a considerable distance, and almost always returning victor. With a high river when in a spate as we say here, after much rain, he would perch himself on the very edge of the high river dyke with the water roaring and bubbling about him to his belly, watching the dark upwards of the fish, and, immediately he saw one sailing at it at all hazards, tail be laid it on the back, dragging it till and seemingly more delighted than the fisher men at the proportion his individual exertions contributed to the general stock. On one occasion he grappled with an enormous fish of twenty three pounds, sustained a desperate battle for two hours, and finally mastered it, when a fisherman, seeing the struggle went to Tiger's assistance, had hold of the salmon by the tail and before the dog had spitted the grape, the fish by a convulsive twist, laid both man and dog on their backs—the fish though it was that salmon went the way of all flesh. On another occasion his master had left him at twelve o'clock on a Sunday night, before the fishing season commences on Monday morning, chained to his kennel. Tiger from his couch looks the back to the fixer, and breaking the chain, killed several salmon ere Mr. S. return. On one particularly stormy night—it had that the fishermen were absent to shelter in a public house hard by—Tiger dislodged his chain and killed of himself seven fish that very night whilst they were enjoying themselves. If his master was at home, and said—Tiger there is a fish coming—off he went wagging his tail, and rather estimated by—off, he has a kick—he was always so that of the fishery of the industry! If the fish was small, he would bring it ashore, "as if he had a tobacco-pipe in his mouth," as the fish men termed it. It would be endless to recount the thousands part of the numerous instances of the sagacity, fidelity, patience, and sport of this invaluable dog—his affection, his intelligence I may say, and the unwearied desire he manifested, as it were, to show his sense of duty to those who supported and were kind to him. And what was his reward? Does he yet live, basking in his old age in the sunshine of their favor and protection? I almost shudder with imagination when I write it—this animal so favored by Nature, and so distinguished by the shrub attributes of every dog, which a poor quadruped could possess, was last week only most inhumanly shot by some miserable hand, which has not yet been discovered, although a considerable reward has been offered for the detection of the brute who could kill such a dog.—Bell's Life in London.

"DISTRAINING FOR RENT."

Our city readers may imagine from our caption that we are about to inflict upon them a column of reminiscences of last week's "Quarter-day." We confess that it does look ominous, and they will hardly believe us, when we stoutly asseverate that such is not our intention. We have heard enough, felt enough, and seen enough of the 1st of May in New-York, where, unfortunately, the subject matter of this discourse, is too often practised, to render it a novelty, especially at this present time. We, however, have seen with infinite pleasure, several scenes of "Distraining for Rent," where the unfortunate tenants were about being turned into the streets, even—and yet possessed of as good feelings as you, kind readers, know us to be, we still say, we were delighted, enraptured.

We take it for granted you have seen copies of Wilkie's celebrated Pictures of this name, [Distraining for Rent,] on which has been founded a new Melo Drama, called the "RENT DAY," first produced at Drury-Lane, with distinguished approbation, and which on Saturday evening last was brought out at the American Theatre by Mr. Hamblin.

Whether the piece owes its popularity in London, to the personation of the two most prominent characters by Mr. Wallack and Miss Phillips, we are not able to say, but certain we are, that in the hands of Mr. and Mrs. Hamblin, Martin and Rachel Heywood will lose none of their interest, and could not find better representatives. It is gratifying in the piece before us to find a great master honored and his work illustrated, as is the case in this instance. The picture—Wilkie's "Rent Day," is not appropriated to save a bad play from the condemnation it merits; but a very agreeable piece is struck out of the painter's suggestion. Mind has whispered to mind. The pencil has become a pen, and this drama is the illustrative letter press which ought for the future to accompany the picture.

The curtain draws on the tableau vivant, the animated group which Wilkie has made immortal, and which the dramatist has restored to mortality, that we may know wherefore they were so honored. The scene of the picture lies in Scotland, the scene of the drama in England. A castellated manor house in a rich country, is the mansion of Grantley, (G. Jones,) an absentee landlord, who extinguishes the smoke of twenty chimneys to supply him with cigars, turns out families when the turn of a card deceives him, and throws a good tenant on the parish when the throw of the dice is against him. The Steward, Old Crums, (Farren,) is a mere agent, griping the poor to supply his master's extravagance, and grinding them to gratify his own rapacity. The rent-day toasts are, on the one side, "Punctuality to all tenants;" on the other, "Mercy to all landlords." The steward however, has no idea of mercy. Martin Heywood, (Mr. Hamblin,) whose father and grandfather lived sixty years on the farm he now occupies, is in arrear, and with his wife and four children must turn out. His brother Toby, (Mr Kenny,) a dominie's deputy, of 15l. per annum, who regrets that his father did not teach him to cultivate land rather than literature, tries his eloquence on Old Crums. But Silver Jack, (Taylor,) and Hyssop, (Sarzedas,) the former a swell mob man, and the latter an unvarnished rogue, finding it convenient to taste
